2. Program categories

Chinese Class (long term): The long-term class (more than half a year) enrolls students twice a year, starting in March and September respectively, with different levels: primary, intermediate and advanced courses. The core courses include: reading and writing, listening and speaking, reading, intensive reading, scientific Chinese, and Chinese culture, etc.

According to the applicants' application and class placement interview results, several small classes will be organized for teaching. Each class will have listening, speaking, reading and writing courses to comprehensively develop students' four skills. Classes will run from Monday to Friday. Every week 22-30 class hours will be arranged. In addition, there will be special tutoring courses for HSK.

※ During the epidemic, online Chinese language classes will be provided. After the outbreak, the registration fee will be waived for online students who continue to study offline.

Autumn semester: Online application ends July 1, 2024.

Spring semester: Online application ends January 1, 2024.

Chinese class (short-term): Short-term class (2-6 weeks); usually held in the winter and summer holidays (starting from the third week of January or July each year). The specific class time and teaching content can be arranged according to the requirements of the applicant. For individual registration, a class should have at least 10 people. In case of group registration, the learning time, teaching content and activity arrangement can be discussed.

※ Short-term advanced courses will include Chinese culture courses and special skills courses. Chinese culture courses cover different areas such as Chinese culture, economic development, history and geography, helping students get a comprehensive understanding of China. Specialized skills courses can lay a solid foundation for students to adapt to undergraduate courses in advance.

3. Completion and further education

中国石油大学(北京)
